

4(a)

A positive charge produces a positive electric potential. A negative charge produces a negative electric potential. Since the electric potential between A and B, which is a scalar addition of electric potential due to both A and B, and it is positive throughout, both spheres are positively charged.

Hence the spheres must have charges of the same sign.
The sign of the charge on sphere A is positive.

4(b)